LIBERTY

As a whirlwind horseman and a man who rides into a tense scene at the proper time, Buck Jones, the popular Fox star, is one of the most thrilling figures on the screen. He does some lively work in "Sunset Sprague," which will be shown for the first time tonight at the Liberty theater—work which more than once causes the spectators to gasp in astonishment. The story of "Sunset Sprague" had some work cut out for Jones. It required a superb horseman—a man with nerve and a man who never gives up in a fight, even though wounded—to make the picture convincing. But Jones sails through it in fine fashion, aided by Miss Patsey De Forest—who is both clever and plucky. Henry J. Hebert makes a good villain, as usual, and Edwin Booth Tilton and Noble Johnson contribute some fine character work.

Lives there a man with soul so dead who never to himself has said: "I wish I were a kid again"? Especially when he thinks of his first circus. There are only a few joys that enter one's lifetime, and not the least of these is a boy's first visit to a circus. For that reason more than usual interest attaches to the coming of "Pink Tights," a romance of the big show, written by J. U. Giesy, adapted for the screen by Philip Hurn, produced by Universal, directed by Reeves Eason, presented by a splendid cast headed by Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin and announced for next Friday at the Liberty theater.

THE STAR

A striking plot is developed in "His Own Law," which comes to the Star theatre, for two days, commencing tonight.

J. C. MacNair, a construction engineer of repute, has an uncanny habit of stealing away from his associates immediately upon the completion of an engineering project, and burying himself in a drunken stupor in the tenderloin district.

During one of these sprees, he meets and quarrels with a young French engineer whom he chances to meet in a cheap saloon. A reconciliation follows and the two "bunk" for the night in a cheap lodging house. In the morning they resort to digging ditches for breakfast money. "Frenchy," as MacNair dubs his newly acquired friend, is unaware of his new companion's identity until one of MacNair's men finds him in the ditch and urges him to return to his desk. Bewildered and amazed at the sudden change in events, "Frenchy" follows his erstwhile "companion in misery."

How the beautiful girl comes into "Frenchy's" life and his subsequent return to his native land at the call to arms, leaving his betrothed alone and his return after having been announced dead on the field of battle; his denouncement of the man who has sacrificed his all to protect his friend's wife and child; the "battle of hearts," proving a "friend in need is a friend indeed," makes this latest Hobart Bosworth production "His Own Law" one of the supreme pictures of the year.

THE MONDALE

Campbell and Burgess, singing and dancing specialists, made a tremendous hit with the audience at the Mondale last night. Miss Burgess, with her wonderful soprano voice, particularly, completely captivating the well filled house. Singing, music, and talking—they do all three well—is their forte, and they will be heard again tonight. In addition, there will be the usual splendid picture show.

CAUSES FOR PREVENTABLE FIRES GIVEN

By FIRE CHIEF DELANEY

The splendid victories achieved by the United States in the successful prosecution of the war give ample testimony that when our people are really aroused and united in their determination to wipe out an evil or accomplish a desired result no barrier is sufficiently high for them not to overcome. The team work and efficiency displayed in the sale of war stamps and liberty bonds, in cultivating war gardens and in the wonderful manner in which a great army was equipped and transported overseas all go to show that what the people fully determine to do they do.

If this same spirit of energy and determination could be quickened into active and united warfare to overcome the ravages of the fire fiend it would be but a short time before the appalling annual fire waste of the nation would be eliminated and become a thing of the past, and the high cost of living be thereby considerably reduced.

This series of articles is written, and an intensive fire prevention campaign is about to be inaugurated in Klamath Falls in the hope, first, of demonstrating that fire loss is a real loss—a community loss in which every property owner and taxpayer of the city is interested, and secondly, of arousing our citizens to a determined and united effort in which every householder and business man shall join to so remove fire hazards there by lower danger and occurrence of fires, as to place Klamath Falls in the very front rank of the nation as being free from preventable fires and a model and standard up to which every other city of the union may measure.

Ordinary fires and general conflagrations differ only in quantity or size, the smallest fire imaginable containing the possibilities of a conflagration serious enough to wipe out an entire city.

Fire causes may be considered as of two classes, the first wherein fire of any nature whatever is directly employed and for whatever purpose, and secondly, those materials which directly contribute to the spread of fire or which have such an affinity for it as to constitute a fire hazard. The first class speaks for itself. Fire is always dangerous and contains great possibilities of injury and destruction. It makes no difference whether it is a seemingly dead spark in the head of a match or in apparently cold ashes or the small flame at the end of a cigar or cigarette or candle, or in a stove or furnace or lamp—wherever fire is, however small the spark or flame, there is a danger to be watched and safeguarded against.

The second class of fire dangers is comprised of substances and materials of such an easily inflammable nature as that the smallest spark may set them on fire. These consist of piles of rubbish and litter, dried grass and undergrowth, greasy and oily rags and polishing cloths lying promiscuously around, drying clothes too near an open flame or hanging old clothes in the closet without removing grease spots or paint from them, from which spontaneous combustion is apt to be generated.

Likewise in this class are to be included the means by which fire escapes or through which it passes, such as stovepipes, chimneys, flues, open fire grates, etc. Rusted or loosely hung stovepipes, defective or unclean flues and chimneys are among the most prolific of all fire causes, so much so that the saying has become quite common among fire preventionists that if a chimney is not cleaned at least once a year the building is in danger of catching on fire.

The greatest and most deplorable cause of fires is carelessness. Not only a single article but an entire volume could easily be written on this one topic alone. It is perhaps not overstepping the mark to say that 90 fires out of every 100 are caused by some form of carelessness or forgetfulness. This statement may be easily verified if the readers of this article will take the trouble to glance over the causes of fires as reported from time to time by the chief of the fire department to the city council.

The following constitute the more common fire causes and fire hazards:

Unclean or defective chimneys and flues, piles of litter and rubbish allowed to accumulate, carelessness on the part of smokers, carelessness in handling matches or allowing children to play with matches, wood boxes too near the stove or the stove placed too near wooden partitions or not properly protected from the floor, quickening a fire with coal oil, hanging electric cords so that they come in contact with metal, overloading or overheating stoves, carelessness in the use of gasoline, placing ashes, either hot or cold, in wooden receptacles instead of a metal container, carelessness in forgetting to turn off or disconnect the current when through with an electric pressing iron or other electrical wiring and gas appliances, greasy and oily rags allowed to lie around and generate spontaneous combustion instead of being placed in an empty lard can or other metal receptacle, and a thousand other acts of carelessness, too numerous to mention, of which the majority of the people are guilty, the more prominent of which will be more fully treated in succeeding articles.

Pure Water Is Health Service Campaign Result

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Within the last twelve months the danger to railway travelers of infection with typhoid fever, dysentery and other water-borne diseases has been reduced to a minimum throughout the greater part of the country by the co-operation of the United States public health service with the different state boards of health in the testing of the water used on railway trains for drinking and cooking. And, within the next few months, similar protection will be afforded to passengers on river and lake steamers and to ocean steamships sailing from American ports. This will tend to end the severe outbreaks of typhoid fever that have from time to time been traced to ships (especially to excursion boats) as well as to the probably more numerous but far less easily traced illnesses of railway travelers from similar pollution.

"The work," said Surgeon General Cumming of the United States health service, "was really begun in June of last year, when at the convention of state and territorial health officers, in session at Washington, D. C., a plan was decided upon whereby the service was to co-operate with the states in reducing typhoid fever either by sending them to sanitary engineers to investigate their water supplies or by helping them to organize state divisions of sanitary engineering to look after the work."

"Work has since been done in nearly half the states of the Union, in which many sanitary divisions were lacking. In nearly all of these such bodies have been or are now being organized; and in about half of them surveys have been made of many of all important water supplies, most of which have been found safe for use on trains. Periodic inspection is, however, of course necessary."
